In this edition the guest is the founder of the KDE Community User Days, Gerd Knorr and the highlights of the podcast are the releases of the first two editions, the discussion with him, and the presentations of the third edition of the Community Days. " "The user experience of KDE Applications is not the same for everyone. If you want to help make KDE applications more accessible to people with visual impairments, this tutorial will show you how. You will learn how to make KDE applications accessible, starting with KDE Applications in general. After you have mastered the basics, you can focus on one of the core applications, Konqueror. When you have finished, you can continue with the other applications in the KDE Applications suite or move on to advanced techniques." "With new technologies the development of applications becomes faster and easier. In this episode I will talk about all the technologies used to make my application, KStars, more accessible. We will have a look at all the technologies used in the application, starting from the UI - the graphical interface, to the backend, the database and the Qt technologies. We will also have a look at the interface and how it is put together." "There is a series of new technologies, called HTML5, which are widely used for creating applications for mobile phones, tablets and smart watches. These technologies allow us to build websites which can be read by almost any type of device, including mobile phones and mobile browsers. For this session I will talk about the technologies used in KStars, the KDE astronomy application. I will tell you about the API of the application and how it can be used to create an accessible application for the user of a smart watch, for example." "Today applications are becoming more and more accessible to the visually impaired. The advantages of such accessibility include improved collaboration, better communication, and a more stable learning environment 81e310abfb
