Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a disc processing apparatus that processes a disc-shaped recording medium (so-called optical disc). 2. Description of the Related Art Conventionally, an optical disc is widely used as a recording medium that stores computer data, audio data and the like. For example, a compact disc (CD), a mini-disc (MD), a digital versatile disc (DVD) or the like is known as such an optical disc. An optical disc includes a recording layer on a main surface of a disc substrate formed of polycarbonate or the like. In an optical disc such as a CD, the recording layer is formed of a recording material such as a dye. In an optical disc such as a DVD, the recording layer is formed of an organic dye, a dye complex or the like. A laser beam is irradiated to an optical disc such as a CD to read out data recorded in the recording layer of the optical disc, or the like. When the data is read out in this manner, there is a risk that a reflection surface of a read-out portion may be damaged and a tracking servo or the like may be adversely affected. To solve the problem, there has been proposed a technique in which a shutter member for shielding the laser beam is placed on a light source (for example, Japanese Laid-Open Patent Application No. 11-180629). That is, the laser beam is irradiated on the disc with the shutter member placed on the laser beam. In this manner, the laser beam is radiated to the disc on which no data is recorded, so that the recording layer of the optical disc is protected. However, since the shutter member is placed on the light source, the installation of the device becomes complicated and an apparatus size increases. Further
